3. Justification in the curriculum, relation to other subjects and to the profession

The course Recursos Territoriales Turísticos is included in the Tourism Studies section of the Humanities Degree: Cultural History and deals with the study of the environment for the development of tourism, its implementation and organization in space. It analyzes the relationships between the elements of the environment and the development of tourism, which includes the study of the factors of location of the tourist activity in different spatial scales, together with the analysis and characterization of the main tourist regions. In this sense, it is a basic subject that from the foundations of territorial analysis provides theoretical and applied contents, which aim to awaken in students a reflexive and critical conscience about the processes of tourist development, providing them with a solid training for the optimal performance of the different professional opportunities associated with the mention in Tourism. On the one hand, it contributes to providing students with a sufficient base to be able to go deeper into their analysis and planning and, therefore, very useful for those who opt for the specialization in tourism planning and management, while enriching and broadening the vision about tourism of those others who decide in the future to apply it in the setting up of tourism companies.

Insofar as this course aims to study the territory as a tourist resource, it will deepen the geographical knowledge of the Spanish territory and its tourist use. The student will acquire basic knowledge of Spanish geography, emphasizing the need to preserve its territorial resources for future generations.

The course is conceived as an introduction to the study of the existing relations between tourism and territory, assuming as a starting point that the tourism phenomenon has a clear spatial dimension. This does not exclude that the analysis of the tourist activity is approached from integrating approaches, in accordance with certain emerging trends within the Geography of Tourism. For this reason, from a theoretical point of view, tourism is inserted within the wider concept of recreation - emphasising that it is just another form of mobility among the many that individuals develop - and emphasises social and environmental aspects that are closely related to its evolution.

ADDITIONAL COMMENTS, REMARKS

As a complement to the contents included in the syllabus, two SEMINARS will be held:

Mass tourism and some recent manifestations: platform tourism, overtourism and the emergence of tourismphobia. In recent years, tourism has ceased to be considered solely as a source of economic benefits, and both citizens and administrations have begun to identify a number of negative externalities. Consequently, these impacts have led to the emergence of new concepts whose origin and significance we will try to elucidate and discuss.

New forms of tourism consumption: alternative or complementary? The same trends that seem to be causing the decline of mass tourism spaces are leading to the emergence of new tourism models. It is therefore a question of analysing and discussing new products that favour the revaluation of resources that have been delayed until now, or that directly create their own attractions. But, in general, they also produce new ways of relationship with the territory and with the hosting society, so we need new conceptual and methodological tools to approach them.
